

Matthew 14:32

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And when they were come into the ship, the wind ceased.

Analysis

And when they were come into the ship, the wind ceased (καὶ ἀναβάντων αὐτῶν εἰς τὸ πλοῖον ἐκόπασεν ὁ ἄνεμος)—The verb ἀναβαίνω (anabainō, 'to go up, to embark') marks the moment Jesus and Peter enter the boat together. Immediately the verb κοπάζω (kopazō, 'to grow weary, to cease') in aorist tense indicates instant cessation of the storm. Earlier Jesus slept through a storm (8:23-27), but here He walks through one. Both demonstrate His authority over nature—He commands as Lord whether present in the boat or approaching it.

The immediate calming contrasts with the disciples' earlier amazement (8:27) when He calmed the storm by command. This time the storm ceases at His presence, showing progressive revelation of His deity. The wind that had battered them (v. 24) and terrified them (v. 26) obeys its Creator. Where Christ enters, chaos submits to order.

Historical Context

This occurred during Jesus's Galilean ministry, shortly after feeding the 5,000 (14:13-21) and dismissing the crowds (14:22-23). The Sea of Galilee is notorious for sudden violent storms due to cool air from surrounding mountains colliding with warm air over the water. Roman and Jewish sources attest to the dangerous nature of Galilean lake storms, making the disciples' fear understandable and Jesus's mastery more remarkable.
