

Matthew 18:4

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven.

Analysis

Jesus' statement 'Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven' answers the disciples' question about kingdom greatness (v. 1). True greatness requires childlike humility—recognizing total dependence on God. 'Humble himself' is active, not passive—choosing to renounce status-seeking and self-promotion. The paradox: greatness comes through humility, not self-assertion. Children's lowly status, teachability, and dependence model kingdom values.

Historical Context

The disciples' question 'Who is the greatest in the kingdom?' (v. 1) revealed wrong thinking about kingdom status. Jesus' response upends worldly values—greatness through servanthood, not dominance. Children in ancient culture had no legal rights or social status, making them ideal illustrations of kingdom humility. Self-humbling precedes exaltation (23:12).
