

Matthew 20:26

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But it shall not be so among you: but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister;

Analysis

Jesus declares 'it shall not be so among you,' contrasting kingdom leadership with worldly power structures. Instead of exercising dominion, Christian leaders serve: 'whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister.' The Greek 'diakonos' (minister/servant) indicates one who serves others' needs. Reformed church government emphasizes servant leadership, not hierarchical domination. Greatness in Christ's kingdom is measured by service, not status; by humility, not power.

Historical Context

This teaching follows James and John's request for chief positions (20:20-23), revealing continuing worldly ambition among disciples. Jesus contrasts Gentile rulers who 'exercise dominion' and 'exercise authority' with kingdom values. The Roman Empire's hierarchical power structure provided the negative example. Jesus' own ministry modeled servant leadership.
