

Matthew 21:26

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But if we shall say, Of men; we fear the people; for all hold John as a prophet.

Analysis

But if we shall say, Of men; we fear the people—Raw political pragmatism: φοβούμεθα τὸν ὄχλον (phoboumētha ton ochlon), 'we fear the crowd.' For all hold John as a prophet—the same people who held Jesus as prophet (v.11, 46) yet would soon cry for His crucifixion. Popular opinion proved fickle foundation.

The leaders' fear of man became a snare (Prov 29:25). They knew truth (John was God's prophet) but suppressed it to preserve power and position. This self-aware hypocrisy—knowing right but choosing wrong for political gain—marks the blasphemy against the Holy Spirit: willful rejection of known truth.

Historical Context

The Sanhedrin's power depended partly on popular support. Rome granted them religious authority but watched for unrest. Condemning a beloved prophet could trigger riots, threatening their delicate political balance. Yet this same calculation led them to kill Jesus (John 11:48-50).
