

Matthew 24:11

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many.

Analysis

And many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many (καὶ πολλοὶ ψευδοπροφῆται ἐγερθήσονται καὶ πλανήσουσιν πολλούς)—After false messiahs (v. 5), Jesus warns of ψευδοπροφῆται (pseudoprophētai)—literally "lying prophets." The verb ἐγείρω (egeirō, "rise up") suggests they emerge from within the community, not invade from outside. The repetition of "many... many" hammers home the scope: widespread deception affecting large numbers.

False prophets are more dangerous than false messiahs because they speak with apparent spiritual authority while subtly undermining truth. Deuteronomy 13 warns that false prophets may even perform signs and wonders. 2 Peter 2:1 specifies they "secretly bring in destructive heresies." The antidote? Test all prophecy against Scripture (1 John 4:1, Acts 17:11) and examine fruit (Matthew 7:15-20).

Historical Context

The apostolic era saw numerous false teachers: Hymenaeus and Philetus taught resurrection had already occurred (2 Timothy 2:17-18), the Judaizers demanded circumcision (Galatians), early Gnostics denied Christ's incarnation (1 John 4:2-3). Before AD 70, Josephus records multiple "prophets" promising deliverance who led thousands to destruction. Church councils (Nicaea, Chalcedon, etc.) convened specifically to combat false teaching that had deceived many.
