

Matthew 24:4

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And Jesus answered and said unto them, Take heed that no man deceive you.

Analysis

Take heed that no man deceive you (βλέπετε μή τις ὑμᾶς πλανήσῃ)—Jesus's first warning in the Olivet Discourse addresses deception (πλανᾶω, planaō—to lead astray, the root of our word "planet" for wandering stars). The imperative blepete (take heed, watch) demands vigilant discernment. Deception, not destruction, is presented as the primary danger for disciples navigating the end times.

This warning brackets the entire discourse (repeated in vv. 11, 24) and identifies spiritual discernment as essential for endurance. The passive voice ("be deceived") indicates vulnerability—deception happens to believers unless they actively guard against it. Paul later echoes this concern in 2 Thessalonians 2:3: "Let no man deceive you by any means."

Historical Context

Between AD 30-70, numerous messianic pretenders arose in Judea. Josephus catalogs several: Theudas (Acts 5:36), an Egyptian false prophet who led 30,000 to the Mount of Olives, and various zealot leaders promising deliverance. This was also the period when the apostolic church had to contend with early Gnostic heresies and Judaizers. The disciples needed this warning for their immediate future.
