

Matthew 24:41

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

Analysis

---

Two women shall be grinding at the mill—The Greek alēthō (ἀλήθω) describes hand-mill grain grinding, daily women's work in first-century households. The one shall be taken, and the other left—identical language to verse 40, reinforcing the pattern. Two women, same work, same location, radically different eternal destinies. External similarity conceals internal reality.

The repetition (two men, two women) emphasizes universality—no occupation, gender, or location exempts anyone from this division. The mill scene pictures life's routines continuing until the moment of Christ's return. These aren't 'end-times tribulation scenarios' but the normal course of life interrupted by the Day of the Lord. The 'taking' remains judicial removal, not blessed escape.

Historical Context

Women ground grain daily using two millstones—hard, monotonous work often done in pairs or groups (Exodus 11:5, Job 31:10). The handmill (mylos, μύλος) was essential household equipment. Jesus again chooses mundane activity to illustrate eternal stakes. In AD 70, two women might be grinding when Roman armies arrived; at the Second Coming, the pattern repeats cosmically.

Study Questions

1. What daily routines tempt you to forget that this could be the day Christ returns?
2. How can you maintain spiritual vigilance while engaged in necessary but monotonous tasks?
3. If you were grinding at the mill with someone today, would you know which of you would be 'taken' and which 'left'?
