

Matthew 26:16

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And from that time he sought opportunity to betray him.

Analysis

And from that time he sought opportunity to betray him—The Greek ezetei eukairian (ἐζήτει εὐκαιρίαν) means 'he kept seeking a favorable occasion.' The imperfect tense indicates continuous action—Judas was constantly watching for the right moment. Eukairia (εὐκαιρία) means 'good opportunity' or 'opportune time,' revealing calculated betrayal, not impulsive sin.

The word paradoi (παραδοῖ), 'to betray/hand over,' appears throughout this chapter, linking Judas's act to God's sovereign plan (v. 2). What Judas intends for evil, God ordains for redemption. Satan entered Judas (Luke 22:3), yet Judas remains culpable—divine sovereignty and human responsibility coexist in Scripture's mystery. The betrayer becomes God's unwitting instrument accomplishing salvation.

Historical Context

Judas's 'opportunity' came Thursday night when Jesus retreated to Gethsemane with the eleven. Away from the crowds the Sanhedrin feared (v. 5), Judas could lead the temple guard to arrest Jesus without public riot. God's sovereignty overruled the leaders' plan to avoid the feast—Jesus died as the Passover Lamb.
