

Matthew 26:32

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But after I am risen again, I will go before you into Galilee.

Analysis

But after I am risen again, I will go before you into Galilee (μετὰ δὲ τὸ ἐγερθῆναι με προάξω ὑμᾶς εἰς τὴν Γαλιλαίαν, meta de to egerthēnai me proaxō hymas eis tēn Galilaian)—Immediately after predicting their failure, Jesus promises restoration. I will go before you (προάξω, proaxō)—as a shepherd leads his sheep (John 10:4), Christ will resume His pastoral role despite their desertion.

Galilee, where Jesus first called them (Matthew 4:18-22), becomes the place of recommissioning (Matthew 28:16-20). This promise anchors hope: their failure is not final. The Resurrection will reverse the scattering, reconstituting the flock under the risen Shepherd. Grace triumphs over human weakness.

Historical Context

Galilee held deep significance as the region where Jesus's public ministry began and where most disciples originated. His promise to meet them there after resurrection evoked their initial calling, signaling renewal and fresh commissioning. The geographic return symbolized spiritual restoration to their original purpose.
