

Matthew 26:72

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And again he denied with an oath, I do not know the man.

Analysis

And again he denied with an oath, I do not know the man (καὶ πάλιν ἠρνήσατο μετὰ ὄρκου ὅτι Οὐκ οἶδα τὸν ἄνθρωπον)—Peter's second denial escalated: πάλιν ('again') he denied (ἀρνέομαι), but now μετὰ ὄρκου ('with an oath'). An ὄρκος (oath) invoked God as witness to truth—ironically, Peter swore by God while denying God's Son. The phrase Οὐκ οἶδα τὸν ἄνθρωπον ('I do not know the man') depersonalizes Jesus—not 'I don't know Jesus' but 'I don't know the man,' treating Christ as a stranger. This fulfilled Jesus's prediction: 'you will deny Me three times' (26:34).

The oath's addition shows sin's progressive nature—first denial was evasive ('I don't know what you mean'), second was explicit with oath ('I don't know the man'). Each sin unrepented makes the next easier and worse. Peter's oath violated Jesus's teaching against swearing (5:33-37), compounding his sin. Yet even this wasn't final—Luke 22:32 records Jesus's prayer: 'I have prayed for you, that your faith may not fail.' Peter's faith wavered but didn't fail utterly, demonstrating preservation of saints through Christ's intercession.

Historical Context

Oaths were common in Jewish culture for affirming truth (Genesis 21:23-24; 1 Samuel 20:3). Mishnaic law developed elaborate oath distinctions. Peter's oath-reinforced denial shows desperation—as pressure increased, denials intensified. The phrase 'the man' (ὁ ἄνθρωπος) rather than 'Jesus' attempted to distance Peter from Christ by using generic language. This psychological distancing technique (depersonalization) reveals the self-deceptive nature of sin—we minimize wrongdoing through euphemism and abstraction.

Study Questions

1. How does sin's progressive nature (Peter's escalating denials) warn you to repent at first compromise rather than continuing?
2. When have you depersonalized Jesus ('the man,' 'the historical figure') to avoid personal commitment to Him as Lord?
