

Matthew 27:14

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And he answered him to never a word; insomuch that the governor marvelled greatly.

Analysis

And he answered him to never a word; insomuch that the governor marvelled greatly (ἐθαύμασεν λίαν)—The Greek ethaumasen lian (marveled exceedingly) shows Pilate's amazement. No defendant remained silent when facing crucifixion—Rome's most horrific execution, reserved for slaves and rebels.

Pilate sensed something transcendent. This was no ordinary prisoner. Jesus's majestic silence was more powerful than eloquent defense, revealing His divine self-control and sovereign purpose. 'He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth' (Isaiah 53:7).

Historical Context

Crucifixion was Rome's ultimate deterrent—a slow, excruciating public death designed to humiliate and terrorize. Roman citizens were exempt; it was for non-citizens, especially slaves and insurrectionists. That Jesus faced this willingly was incomprehensible.
