

Matthew 4:1

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Then was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil.

Analysis

Jesus being 'led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil' shows the Spirit's guidance into testing, not away from it. The Greek word 'tempted' (peirazō) can mean tested or enticed—here both apply. This wilderness testing immediately follows His baptismal anointing, demonstrating that spiritual high points often precede trials. Jesus must prove qualified as the Last Adam where the first Adam failed.

Historical Context

The Judean wilderness west of the Dead Sea is barren, rocky, and dangerous. The 40-day fast parallels Moses (Exodus 34:28) and Elijah (1 Kings 19:8), linking Jesus to Law and Prophets. Satan's name means 'adversary,' identifying him as the covenant enemy.
