

Matthew 4:16

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

The people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up.

Analysis

Isaiah's imagery of people in darkness seeing 'great light' describes spiritual awakening and salvation. The 'shadow of death' refers to the darkness of sin, judgment, and spiritual death in which all humanity exists apart from Christ. The phrase 'light is sprung up' indicates divine initiative—salvation comes to those in darkness by God's gracious illumination, not human seeking. This anticipates John 1:4-5, 9 describing Christ as the true Light.

Historical Context

Isaiah 9:1-2's historical context was Assyrian devastation of northern Israel. Yet this judgment became the location where messianic light first shone, demonstrating God's pattern of bringing salvation where judgment fell—law to gospel, death to life, darkness to light.
