

Matthew 4:25

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And there followed him great multitudes of people from Galilee, and from Decapolis, and from Jerusalem, and from Judaea, and from beyond Jordan.

Analysis

The 'great multitudes' following Jesus from multiple regions demonstrates the magnetic power of His teaching and miracles. The geographic breadth—Galilee, Decapolis, Jerusalem, Judea, and beyond Jordan—shows how quickly His fame spread. These crowds represent varied motives: some sought healing, others teaching, some were merely curious. This mixed multitude foreshadows the visible church containing both wheat and tares (Matthew 13:24-30).

Historical Context

Decapolis ('ten cities') was a region southeast of Galilee with predominantly Gentile population. The geographic list shows Jesus' ministry attracting both Jews and Gentiles. Travel required significant effort, indicating strong motivation to hear Jesus despite distance and difficulty.

Study Questions

1. What does the mixed composition of the crowds teach about distinguishing between genuine disciples and mere followers?
2. How should the church today respond to those who come with varied motives—some genuine, some superficial?
