

Matthew 6:12

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.

Analysis

The prayer addresses spiritual debt: 'And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors' (Greek: ἄφες ἡμῖν τὰ ὀφειλήματα ἡμῶν, 'forgive us our debts'). The term 'debts' (ὀφειλήματα) refers to moral obligations unfulfilled - sins are debts owed to God. The petition acknowledges ongoing need for forgiveness, not once-for-all salvation but daily cleansing. The phrase 'as we forgive' is crucial and troubling - it conditions divine forgiveness on human forgiveness. This is not earning salvation but demonstrating genuine repentance. Those who have truly experienced God's forgiveness extend it to others; unforgiveness evidences hardened hearts.

Historical Context

Debt was crushing reality in first-century Palestine, with debtor's prison and debt slavery common. Jesus' parable of the unforgiving servant (Matthew 18:21-35) explicitly interprets this petition. Jewish thought recognized both vertical (sins against God) and horizontal (sins against others) dimensions of wrongdoing, requiring both divine and human forgiveness. The Jubilee principle (Leviticus 25) involved debt cancellation every fifty years, prefiguring the complete forgiveness Jesus offers.
