

Matthew 6:4

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

That thine alms may be in secret: and thy Father which seeth in secret himself shall reward thee openly.

Analysis

The promise that God 'seeth in secret' provides powerful motivation for private piety. The omniscient Father observes what no human sees and 'shall reward thee openly'—whether in this life or the final judgment. This establishes divine rather than human audience as the proper focus of obedience. The reward may come in transformed character, God's pleasure, eternal recompense, or visible vindication, but it is certain and surpasses any earthly acclaim.

Historical Context

Ancient patronage systems operated on reciprocal obligation—gifts created public debt and enhanced donor status. Jesus radically reorients giving toward vertical relationship with God rather than horizontal social dynamics. The Father's reward transcends temporary human honor.

Study Questions

1. How does knowing God sees and rewards secret obedience transform motivation for hidden acts of service and righteousness?
2. What does this teach about trusting God's future vindication rather than demanding present recognition?
