

Matthew 8:29

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And, behold, they cried out, saying, What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? art thou come hither to torment us before the time?

Analysis

The demons' recognition of Jesus as 'Son of God' demonstrates that spiritual beings (unlike many humans) clearly recognize Christ's divine identity. Their question 'art thou come hither to torment us before the time?' reveals they know their ultimate doom is certain, only its timing uncertain. This shows that mere knowledge of Christ's identity doesn't constitute saving faith—demons believe and tremble (James 2:19) but aren't saved. The 'time' refers to final judgment when demons will be cast into eternal punishment.

Historical Context

The demons' theology is remarkably accurate—they know Jesus is God's Son, understand there is an appointed time for judgment, and recognize their certain doom. Yet this intellectual assent without submission demonstrates that saving faith requires more than mere belief in facts about Christ.

Study Questions

1. What does the demons' belief in Christ without salvation teach about the difference between intellectual assent and saving faith?
2. How does the demons' certainty about future judgment contrast with human presumption and false security?
