

Matthew 9:12

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But when Jesus heard that, he said unto them, They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick.

Analysis

Jesus' response—"They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick" (οὐ χρειαν εχουσιν οι ισχυοντες ιατρον αλλ οι κακως εχοντες)—uses medical metaphor to explain His mission. The 'whole' (healthy) versus 'sick' comparison exposes Pharisaic self-righteousness. Pharisees considered themselves spiritually healthy and sinners as diseased. Jesus doesn't dispute the metaphor but inverts its application: those who recognize their spiritual sickness seek the Physician; those who deny their illness remain fatally diseased. The Pharisees' problem isn't absence of sin but refusal to acknowledge it. Jesus comes not for the self-righteous but for those who recognize desperate need. This is gospel: diagnosis (you're sick unto death) and remedy (Jesus is the only cure).

Historical Context

Medical imagery was common in Jewish wisdom literature. Philo and other Jewish writers described Torah as medicine for the soul. Jesus appropriates this imagery but applies it personally—He is the Physician. In the ancient world, doctors made house calls to the sick; they didn't wait for patients to come to them. Similarly, Jesus seeks sinners rather than waiting for them to achieve righteousness first. Early church fathers elaborated this medical metaphor extensively, seeing sin as sickness and Christ as divine Physician.
