

Matthew 9:8

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But when the multitudes saw it, they marvelled, and glorified God, which had given such power unto men.

Analysis

The crowds' response—'they marvelled, and glorified God, which had given such power unto men' (εθαυμασαν και εδοξασαν τον θεον τον δοντα εξουσιαν τοιαυτην τοις ανθρωποις)—reveals both insight and misunderstanding. They correctly recognize divine power (εξουσια/exousia, authority) and appropriately glorify God. However, their phrase 'such power unto men' (plural ανθρωποις) suggests they view Jesus as merely a specially empowered human rather than God incarnate. They see the miracle but miss the fuller revelation. 'Marvelled' (εθαυμασαν) indicates amazement, wonder, even fear. True miracles should provoke both worship and theological reflection. The crowd's partial understanding mirrors our own tendency to appreciate God's benefits while missing deeper revelations of His character.

Historical Context

First-century Jewish crowds witnessed itinerant teachers and occasional miracle workers, but Jesus' authority was unprecedented. Unlike rabbis who cited authorities or prophets who invoked God's name, Jesus spoke with inherent authority. The crowd's amazement was appropriate—this was unlike anything previously witnessed. Matthew, writing for Jewish Christians, emphasizes how Jesus' miracles fulfill messianic expectations while transcending mere prophetic wonder-working. The crowd's wonder without commitment foreshadows Israel's broader response: amazed but ultimately rejecting.
