

Nahum 1:10

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For while they be folden together as thorns, and while they are drunken as drunkards, they shall be devoured as stubble fully dry.

Analysis

For while they be folden together as thorns (ki ad-sirim sevukim, כִּי אַד-סִירִים סֵבֻכִּים). Sirim (סִירִים, "thorns") and sevukim (סֵבֻכִּים, "entangled/interwoven") create an image of dense, twisted thornbushes—impossible to penetrate but easily burned. This may describe Nineveh's defenders packed tightly together in formation, seeming formidable but actually vulnerable. Thorns appear strong when intertwined but provide poor defense against fire.

And while they are drunken as drunkards (uchesovam sevuim, וְכִסְבָּאִם סִבּוּאִים). Sava (סִבָּא, "drunkard") describes complete intoxication—impaired judgment, reduced coordination, false confidence. Whether literal (Assyrian defenders drunk during the siege) or metaphorical (spiritually/morally intoxicated by pride and power), drunkenness indicates vulnerability masquerading as strength. The drunk feel invincible but are easily overcome.

They shall be devoured as stubble fully dry (ukhullu qash male yovalu, אֲכָלוּ יַבֵּשׁ מְלֵא קָשׁ). Qash (קָשׁ, "stubble") is dried crop remnants after harvest—completely dry, instantly flammable. Male yavesh ("fully dry") emphasizes extreme flammability. The image is devastating: Nineveh's mighty armies, despite appearing strong (entangled thorns, numerous drunkards), will be consumed as quickly and completely as fire burns dry stubble. Ancient historians record that Nineveh was indeed burned during its conquest—palaces, temples, and buildings set ablaze. Archaeological evidence confirms massive fire destruction layers.

Historical Context

Assyrian military might was legendary—disciplined armies, advanced siege weapons, brutal tactics that terrorized enemies into submission. Yet Nahum prophesies total defeat. Historical accounts describe chaos during Nineveh's final siege: demoralized defenders, failed counterattacks, and ultimately catastrophic defeat. The Babylonian Chronicle records the city's burning. Excavations reveal destruction by fire throughout Nineveh's ruins. God used the Babylonian-Median coalition to fulfill His word—the thorns and stubble imagery proved literally accurate. The mighty fell swiftly and completely.

Study Questions

1. How does the imagery of entangled thorns and drunk defenders illustrate false confidence based on apparent strength?
2. What modern 'thorns' and 'stubble'—sources of false security—might appear strong but are actually vulnerable to God's judgment?
3. How does this prophecy encourage believers facing seemingly overwhelming opposition—what appears invincible to us is utterly vulnerable before God?
