

Numbers 1:34

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Of the children of Manasseh, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

Analysis

---

Manasseh's census, like Ephraim's, reflects Joseph's double portion through his sons. The tribe's division into eastern and western components (Numbers 32:33; Joshua 17:1-2) created unique circumstances, with half the tribe separated by the Jordan River. This geographic division would later prove problematic, illustrating the danger of fragmenting God's people. The unity of Christ's body must be jealously guarded, as division weakens witness and invites spiritual compromise.

Historical Context

Half of Manasseh settled east of the Jordan with Gad and Reuben (Numbers 32:33), while the other half received territory west of the Jordan in Canaan proper. This unusual arrangement created challenges for tribal cohesion and identity.

Study Questions

1. How does Manasseh's division across the Jordan River warn against allowing secondary matters to fragment God's people?
2. What does this teach us about the importance of maintaining unity in the body of Christ?
