

Numbers 13:2

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Send thou men, that they may search the land of Canaan, which I give unto the children of Israel: of every tribe of their fathers shall ye send a man, every one a ruler among them.

Analysis

God commands Moses to send spies into Canaan, saying 'which I give unto the children of Israel,' using the present tense to indicate the certainty of His promise despite Canaanite occupation. The scouting mission's purpose was reconnaissance—learning the land's character, the people's strength, and the cities' fortifications—not determining whether conquest was possible. God had already promised the land; the spies were to discover how to approach the conquest strategically. Tragically, ten of twelve spies would return with faithless reports, causing Israel to refuse to enter the land despite God's promise. This demonstrates how human unbelief can reject divine promises when circumstances appear unfavorable. The command to send 'of every tribe of their fathers...a ruler among them' ensured representative leadership and prevented claims that only one tribe's perspective was represented. The twelve spies were respected leaders, not random individuals, making their subsequent faithless report even more tragic. This incident teaches that spiritual leadership doesn't guarantee spiritual faithfulness, and that even leaders can fall into unbelief when trusting their own assessment rather than God's promise.

Historical Context

The scouting expedition occurred during Israel's approach to Canaan from the south, based at Kadesh-barnea in the Negev wilderness. The spies spent forty days exploring Canaan from the southern Negev to northern Lebanon ('from the wilderness of Zin unto Rehob, as men come to Hamath,' Numbers 13:21). They saw fortified Canaanite cities, grape clusters so large two men carried them on a pole (13:23), and the Anakim giants (descendants of Nephilim) who terrified them (13:28,33). Archaeological evidence confirms Canaan during the Late Bronze Age (15th-13th centuries BCE) featured heavily fortified cities with massive walls, professional armies, and Egyptian oversight (the region was under Egyptian hegemony). From a human military perspective, Israel's conquest seemed impossible—an untested mob of escaped slaves attempting to conquer established kingdoms. Yet God had promised the land, and Caleb and Joshua's minority report ('we are well able to overcome it,' 13:30) demonstrated that faith trusts God's promise despite unfavorable circumstances.

1. How does God's present-tense promise ('which I give') despite Canaanite occupation teach about faith versus sight?
2. What does the spies' failure warn about the danger of evaluating God's promises based on human assessment of circumstances?
