

Numbers 14:12

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

I will smite them with the pestilence, and disinherit them, and will make of thee a greater nation and mightier than they.

Analysis

God threatens: 'I will smite them with the pestilence, and disinherit them, and will make of thee a greater nation and mightier than they.' This recalls God's earlier threat after the golden calf (Ex 32:10). The Hebrew 'nakah' (smite/strike) and 'yarash' (disinherit/dispossess) indicate total destruction. God's offer to make Moses into a greater nation tested Moses' heart - would he accept personal exaltation if it meant Israel's destruction? Moses' intercessory response (v.13-19) demonstrated his shepherd's heart, preferring Israel's preservation over personal greatness. This foreshadows Christ who could have called legions of angels (Matt 26:53) but chose the cross for our sake. True leaders value those they serve above personal advancement.

Historical Context

This crisis followed Israel's rejection of Caleb and Joshua's faithful report, with the congregation ready to stone them and choose new leadership to return to Egypt (v.1-10). God's patience reached its limit - persistent rebellion despite continuous miracles warranted destruction. Moses' intercession appealed to God's reputation among nations (v.13-16) and His revealed character of mercy (v.17-19), successfully averting immediate destruction though not preventing judgment (forty years of wilderness wandering, v.26-35). The incident demonstrates that intercessory prayer based on God's character and promises can change divine actions, though not violating His justice.
