

Numbers 20:7

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

Analysis

God instructs Moses to 'speak ye unto the rock' to bring forth water. The command to speak rather than strike (as at Rephidim, Exodus 17:6) represented a new directive requiring fresh obedience. Moses' subsequent striking of the rock instead of speaking to it (verse 11) violated this command, resulting in his exclusion from Canaan. Second-time obedience must match current instructions, not merely repeat past patterns.

Historical Context

This incident occurred near Kadesh at the end of forty years' wandering, bookending the wilderness period. The generation that failed to enter Canaan was nearly gone; Moses himself would soon be excluded for this failure. Even great leaders must maintain precise obedience to God's specific commands.

Study Questions

1. How do you distinguish between legitimate repetition of past obedience and assumption that God's methods never change?
2. What 'second chances' has God given you that required modified obedience?
