

Numbers 21:15

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And at the stream of the brooks that goeth down to the dwelling of Ar, and lieth upon the border of Moab.

Analysis

At the stream of the brooks that goeth down to the dwelling of Ar—This verse continues the poetic fragment from the Book of the Wars. Ar (אֶר) was Moab's chief city, and these wadis marked territorial boundaries. Lieth upon the border of Moab reiterates Israel's careful navigation of international boundaries under divine supervision.

The repetition of geographical precision throughout these verses serves theological purpose: God's promises involve real estate, actual locations, historical fulfillment. Biblical faith is not spiritualized abstraction but incarnational—concerned with land, borders, cities, mountains. Redemption includes geography.

Historical Context

Ar was a fortified Moabite city, possibly near modern Ar-Rabba. The 'brooks' (נְחָלִים, nechalim) were seasonal wadis cutting through the plateau, essential for settlements in this semi-arid region. Control of these water sources meant political power.

Study Questions

1. How does the Bible's emphasis on actual geography challenge overly spiritualized interpretations of God's promises?
2. What physical, tangible aspects of God's kingdom work are you tempted to minimize or allegorize away?
3. Where do you see God's redemptive purposes intersecting with material, geographical, embodied reality?
