

Numbers 24:7

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

He shall pour the water out of his buckets, and his seed shall be in many waters, and his king shall be higher than Agag, and his kingdom shall be exalted.

Analysis

Balaam prophesies: 'his king shall be higher than Agag, and his kingdom shall be exalted.' This Messianic prophecy points beyond immediate context to Israel's ultimate King. 'Agag' was Amalekite royal title (like Pharaoh for Egypt), representing Israel's enemies. The promise that Israel's king would surpass all enemy kings finds partial fulfillment in David and Solomon but ultimate fulfillment in Christ, the King of kings (Rev 19:16). The 'exalted kingdom' prophesies Christ's eternal reign (Dan 2:44, Luke 1:32-33). Even unwilling prophet Balaam declared Messiah's supremacy over all opposition.

Historical Context

This oracle came during Balaam's third blessing from Peor's top (v.2). While some interpret 'Agag' as generic reference to Amalekite kings, 1 Samuel 15:8 mentions a specific Agag defeated by Saul centuries later, suggesting this was prophetic. Israel's kingdom under David and Solomon did exceed surrounding nations in power and glory. However, the prophecy's full meaning awaits Christ's millennial kingdom when He rules all nations with iron rod (Ps 2:9, Rev 19:15). The prophecy encouraged Israel that despite current weakness (still wilderness wanderers), their future kingdom would dominate. This principle continues - Christ's kingdom seems weak now but will be universally acknowledged.
