

Numbers 32:3

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Ataroth, and Dibon, and Jazer, and Nimrah, and Heshbon, and Elealeh, and Shebam, and Nebo, and Beon,

Analysis

Ataroth, and Dibon, and Jazer (עָטָרוֹת וְדִבְיָן וְיָעָזָר)—this catalog of conquered Moabite cities lists eight locations (nine with Elealeh) known for fertile grazing land. Archaeological evidence confirms these were substantial settlements with good water sources. Dibon (modern Dhiban) was Moab's capital; Jazer had 'pleasant' vineyards (Isaiah 16:8-9). The tribal representatives have done their homework—these are choice territories for livestock.

Yet this detailed knowledge reveals their hearts: they've been surveying settlement options east of Jordan while God intended them for Canaan proper. Like Lot choosing the 'well-watered' plain of Jordan (Genesis 13:10-11), they make pragmatic calculations based on visible resources, forgetting that God's promise pointed westward. The specificity of their request—naming nine cities—shows this wasn't a sudden impulse but planned self-interest.

Historical Context

These Transjordan cities lay in territory conquered from Amorite kings Sihon and Og (Numbers 21:21-35). The Mesha Stele (circa 840 BC) confirms Israelite occupation of Dibon, Ataroth, and Nebo during the divided monarchy period.
