

Numbers 33:5

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And the children of Israel removed from Rameses, and pitched in Succoth.

Analysis

The children of Israel removed from Rameses (וַיַּעֲזַבְנָא מִרְאֵמֶס, vayis'u me-Ra'meses)—The verb nasa' (pulled up tent pegs, broke camp) begins the Exodus itinerary. Rameses was the staging ground for Israel's departure (Exodus 12:37), a royal store-city built by Hebrew slave labor (Exodus 1:11). This first leg to Succoth (סֻכּוֹת, meaning "booths" or "temporary shelters") covered approximately 30-40 miles, a remarkable feat for 600,000 men plus families and livestock.

Numbers 33 provides a comprehensive retrospective of Israel's 40-year journey, listing 42 encampments from Egypt to Canaan. This verse begins the rehearsal of redemption—from slavery (Rameses) to freedom under God's cloud and fire. Each stage demonstrates covenant faithfulness: God didn't transport them instantly but led them step by step, teaching dependence and obedience through wilderness discipline.

Historical Context

The Exodus began circa 1446 BC (early dating) from Rameses in the eastern Nile Delta. Succoth is identified with Tell el-Maskhuta. This chapter was written near the end of the 40 years (circa 1406 BC) as Moses compiled an official record of the journey before his death, providing geographical and theological memory for the conquest generation.
