

Numbers 33:52

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Then ye shall drive out all the inhabitants of the land from before you, and destroy all their pictures, and destroy all their molten images, and quite pluck down all their high places:

Analysis

The command to 'drive out all the inhabitants of the land' and destroy their religious objects ('destroy all their pictures, and destroy all their molten images, and quite pluck down all their high places') required comprehensive removal of idolatry's enticements. This demonstrates that partial obedience in removing sin's sources leads to future compromise. The thoroughness demanded—pictures, images, high places—shows that tolerating any evil influence creates footholds for larger apostasy. Spiritual victory requires complete commitment, not half-measures.

Historical Context

Israel's failure to fully implement this command led to centuries of syncretism and idolatry, as Judges repeatedly documents. The Canaanite 'high places' (worship sites on hills) continually tempted Israel, with even good kings like Asa and Jehoshaphat failing to remove them completely. Solomon's later marriages to foreign wives who turned his heart to other gods (1 Kings 11:1-8) exemplified the danger Moses warned against. Complete obedience would have prevented much subsequent misery.
