

Numbers 5:3

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Both male and female shall ye put out, without the camp shall ye put them; that they defile not their camps, in the midst whereof I dwell.

Analysis

The phrase 'that they defile not their camps, in the midst whereof I dwell' reveals the theological basis for excluding the unclean—God's presence among His people. His holiness requires corresponding holiness in the congregation. The camp's purity was not primarily about disease prevention but about maintaining proper reverence for God's dwelling among Israel. This anticipates the New Testament teaching that believers' bodies are temples of the Holy Spirit (1 Corinthians 6:19), requiring personal holiness.

Historical Context

God's dwelling among Israel via the tabernacle distinguished them from all nations. While other ancient peoples built temples as houses for their gods, Israel's God chose to journey with His people through the wilderness. This intimate presence brought both incredible privilege and serious responsibility—the congregation had to maintain standards befitting God's presence. The New Covenant fulfills this in greater measure as God dwells in believers individually and corporately.
