

Philemon 1:8

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Wherefore, though I might be much bold in Christ to enjoin thee that which is convenient,

Analysis

Wherefore, though I might be much bold in Christ to enjoin thee that which is convenient—διό (dio, wherefore/therefore) marks transition from thanksgiving (vv. 4-7) to request (vv. 8-20). πολλὴν ἐν Χριστῷ παρρησίαν ἔχων (pollēn en Christō parrēsian echōn, having much boldness in Christ) ἐπιτάσσειν σοι τὸ ἀνῆκον (epitassein soi to anēkon, to command you what is fitting)—παρρησία (parrēsia, boldness/freedom of speech) and ἐπιτάσσω (epitassō, command/order) indicate apostolic authority.

Paul could command Philemon's obedience but chooses different approach. τὸ ἀνῆκον (to anēkon, the fitting/proper thing)—receiving Onesimus as brother isn't optional preference but moral obligation. Yet Paul forgoes authoritarian command for loving appeal (v. 9), demonstrating the new-creation ethic where power serves rather than dominates. This models Christian leadership: knowing when to command and when to appeal.

Historical Context

Apostolic authority included binding commands (1 Corinthians 7:10, 11:17, 14:37; 1 Thessalonians 4:2). But Paul distinguished essential doctrine (command) from prudential wisdom (appeal). The Philemon situation required free, willing obedience from the heart (v. 14), not coerced compliance. Ancient patronage culture operated through commands from superior to inferior; Christianity introduced mutual submission "in Christ."

Study Questions

1. When do you exercise legitimate authority, and when do you wisely choose persuasion over command?
2. How does "boldness in Christ" differ from worldly power-plays and personality-driven leadership?
3. What "fitting" actions does the gospel require of you toward those who've wronged you?
