

Philippians 1:22

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labour: yet what I shall choose I wot not.

Analysis

But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labour: yet what I shall choose I wot not (εἰ δὲ τὸ ζῆν ἐν σαρκὶ, τοῦτό μοι καρπὸς ἔργου· καὶ τί αἱρήσομαι οὐ γνωρίζω, ei de to zēn en sarki, touto moi karpos ergou; kai ti hairēsomai ou gnōrizō)—En sarki ("in the flesh") means embodied earthly existence, not sinful flesh. Continued life means fruit of my labour (καρπὸς ἔργου, karpos ergou)—gospel harvest through ministry. Paul values life instrumentally: opportunity for fruitful service.

What I shall choose I wot not (τί αἱρήσομαι οὐ γνωρίζω, ti hairēsomai ou gnōrizō)—hairēsomai (future middle, "I shall choose for myself") imagines preference if Paul had sovereign choice. Ou gnōrizō ("I don't know") admits genuine perplexity. Not indifference—he genuinely can't decide because both options have compelling value. This isn't death-wish but death-readiness balanced with ministry passion.

Historical Context

Paul wrote facing real possibility of execution under Nero. His uncertainty about preference reveals authentic humanity—he's not detached Stoic, indifferent to life/death, but pastor torn between desire for Christ and fruitfulness among believers. Ancient readers would've found this candor remarkable—most philosophical schools prescribed indifference to death.

Study Questions

1. How do you view continued earthly life—as an opportunity for 'fruit of labor' or self-focused pursuits?
2. If you could sovereignly choose life or death (like Paul hypothetically), what would guide your decision?
3. What does Paul's perplexity teach about holding ministry calling and heaven-longing in tension?
