

Philippians 2:1

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies,

Analysis

If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies (Εἴ τις οὖν παράκλησις ἐν Χριστῷ, εἴ τι παραμύθιον ἀγάπης, εἴ τις κοινωνία πνεύματος, εἴ τις σπλάγχνα καὶ οἰκτιρμοί, Ei tis oun paraklēsis en Christō, ei ti paramythion agapēs, ei tis koinōnia pneumatos, ei tis splanchna kai oiktirmoi)—Four ei tis ("if any") clauses aren't expressing doubt but assume reality: "since there is..." The fourfold appeal establishes grounds for Paul's coming exhortation (v. 2).

Paraklēsis ("encouragement, consolation") and paramythion ("comfort, solace") overlap semantically—strengthening through presence and words. Fellowship of the Spirit (κοινωνία πνεύματος, koinōnia pneumatos) could mean fellowship with the Spirit or fellowship produced by the Spirit (likely both). Splanchna ("bowels, compassion," see 1:8) and oiktirmoi ("mercies, compassion") are near-synonyms emphasizing tender affection. Paul grounds his appeal in Trinitarian realities: Christ's consolation, love's comfort, Spirit's fellowship, divine compassion.

Historical Context

Ancient rhetoric used ei tis constructions to build arguments from shared premises. Paul assumes Philippian believers have experienced these spiritual realities—they're not theoretical but experiential foundations. The appeal to shared experience in Christ creates basis for ethical exhortation. Ancient letters often used argumentation from mutual affection before making requests.
