

Philippians 3:7

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ.

Analysis

But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ (Ἀλλὰ ἅτινα ἦν μοι κέρδη, ταῦτα ἡγημαὶ διὰ τὸν Χριστὸν ζημίαν, Alla hatina ēn moi kerdē, tauta hēgēmai dia ton Christon zēmian)—Alla ("but") pivots from credentials (vv. 5-6) to conversion-revaluation. Kerdē ("gains," plural) were his seven privileges—assets in religious economy. Hēgēmai (perfect tense, "I have counted, continue to count") shows settled judgment. Zēmian ("loss, damage")—accounting term opposite kerdē. Dia ton Christon ("for the sake of Christ, because of Christ")—Christ's surpassing worth renders everything else comparative loss.

This is radical revaluation: Paul's Damascus Road encounter (Acts 9) inverted his value system. What he pursued as ultimate goods became liabilities. Not because credentials are evil but because trusting them is idolatry—they compete with Christ. The accounting metaphor (gain/loss) recurs in vv. 8 ("I count all things loss"). Christ's infinite worth relativizes all else.

Historical Context

Paul's Damascus Road experience (Acts 9, 22, 26) revolutionized his life. The risen Christ confronted him: persecuting Christians meant persecuting Jesus (Acts 9:4-5). This shattered Paul's theology—the crucified Nazarene was God's Messiah, vindicated by resurrection. Everything Paul valued (Pharisaic righteousness, zeal, law-blamelessness) opposed God's purposes. His conversion required repudiating his former life's meaning.

Study Questions

1. What 'gains' have become 'loss' for you since encountering Christ?
2. How does Christ's surpassing worth expose the relative worthlessness of worldly achievements?
3. Are there credentials or privileges you still trust alongside (or instead of) Christ alone?
