

Proverbs 1:26

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh;

Analysis

Wisdom's response to rejection: 'I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh.' This shocking language describes divine response to persistent rebellion. God's 'laughter' represents judicial contempt for those who scorned His warnings. The 'mock' parallels their mockery of wisdom. This reflects lex talionis: as they treated wisdom, so wisdom treats them. This isn't capricious cruelty but just recompense. Those who laugh at God's ways will find God laughing at their consequent ruin.

Historical Context

Ancient Near Eastern juridical language included mockery of condemned criminals. This reflects justice's public vindication—wrong is exposed and righteousness validated. The concept appears in Psalm 2:4 where God laughs at rebellious kings. This isn't petty revenge but sovereign contempt for human rebellion. Historical judgments demonstrate this principle—empires that mocked God (Assyria, Babylon, Rome) fell, validating divine justice.
