

Proverbs 1:28

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me:

Analysis

The consequence of rejection: 'Then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me.' This describes the terrifying reversal—when judgment comes, prayers go unanswered. The 'then' indicates too late; the time for mercy has passed. 'Seek me early' (diligently) shows desperate seeking, yet futile. This reflects Hebrews 12:17—Esau found no place for repentance. Common grace and gospel offers have windows of opportunity; spurned, they close. This warns against presuming on future chances to repent.

Historical Context

Ancient Near Eastern treaty language included windows for appeal and curses for breach. Israel's covenant with Yahweh similarly included temporal limits for repentance before judgment. Historical examples include Noah's flood—the door closed (Gen. 7:16), and Jerusalem's destruction after long prophetic warnings. The principle appears in Jesus' parables—the door shut on foolish virgins (Matt. 25:10-12). Opportunity for grace has limits.

Study Questions

1. How does unanswered prayer after persistent rejection challenge assumptions that God must always respond to our calls?
2. What does this teach us about the urgency of heeding God's voice 'today' (Heb. 3:7-8) rather than presuming on future opportunities?
