

Proverbs 1:31

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Therefore shall they eat of the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices.

Analysis

The harvest of rejection: 'Therefore shall they eat of the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices.' The agricultural metaphor shows that choices produce corresponding consequences. 'Eat... fruit' pictures consuming the results of one's actions. 'Filled' suggests inescapable saturation in consequences. 'Their own' emphasizes self-inflicted nature of judgment. This reflects Galatians 6:7—what one sows, one reaps. God's justice gives people the full measure of their chosen path. Autonomous wisdom, pursued, brings its inevitable bitter fruit.

Historical Context

Ancient agricultural societies understood sowing and reaping intimately. The metaphor appears throughout Scripture (Job 4:8; Hosea 8:7). Israel's history demonstrated national-scale reaping: idolatry produced exile, covenant faithfulness produced blessing. Individual and corporate consequences follow moral choices. The principle transcends cultures—natural law built into creation ensures actions produce fitting consequences, both temporally and eternally.

Study Questions

1. How does eating the fruit of one's own way demonstrate that judgment isn't arbitrary punishment but natural consequence?
2. What does being 'filled' with one's own devices teach us about judgment giving the full measure of chosen folly?
