

Proverbs 13:17

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

A wicked messenger falleth into mischief: but a faithful ambassador is health.

Analysis

This proverb contrasts unreliable and faithful messengers. "A wicked messenger falleth into mischief" warns of destructive communication. Mal'akh rasha yippol bera' (מַלְאָךְ רָשָׁע יִפֹּל בְּרָעַ, a wicked messenger falls into evil). Mal'akh (מַלְאָךְ) means messenger, envoy, ambassador. When wicked (rasha, רָשָׁע), they fall into ra (רָע, evil, calamity, harm)—bringing disaster to themselves and those who sent them.

"But a faithful ambassador is health" presents the alternative. Tsir emumim marpe (צִיר אֱמוּנִים מַרְפֵּא, an ambassador of faithfulness—healing). Tsir (צִיר, envoy, messenger, ambassador) who is emun (אֱמוּן, faithful, reliable) brings marpe (מַרְפֵּא, healing, remedy, cure). Reliable messengers bring reconciliation, peace, and restoration.

In ancient times without instant communication, messengers wielded enormous power. They could deliver messages accurately or distort them, representing senders faithfully or misrepresenting them. Wicked messengers caused wars, broken treaties, and disasters. Faithful ones brought peace. Christians are Christ's ambassadors (2 Corinthians 5:20), representing Him to the world. We must faithfully communicate the gospel without adding or subtracting, bringing the healing message of reconciliation. False teachers are wicked messengers who fall into evil; faithful ministers are ambassadors who bring spiritual health through accurate gospel proclamation.

Historical Context

Ancient Near Eastern kingdoms depended on messengers for diplomacy, military coordination, and royal decrees. Reliable envoys were highly valued. Proverbs 25:13 compares a faithful messenger to cold snow in harvest—refreshing and valuable. Conversely, unreliable messengers could provoke wars or failed alliances. Israel's kings sent ambassadors to negotiate treaties (2 Kings 18:17-19:37). The messenger's faithfulness determined whether peace or conflict resulted.
