

Proverbs 14:32

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

The wicked is driven away in his wickedness: but the righteous hath hope in his death.

Analysis

The wicked is driven away in his wickedness: but the righteous hath hope in his death. Beraato yiddacheh rasha (בְּרָעוֹתָיו יִדָּחֵהוּ רָשָׁע, in his evil the wicked is driven away). Dadach (דָּדַח, drive away, thrust out) suggests violent expulsion. At death, the wicked are thrust into judgment with no hope. Vechosehvemoto tsaddiq (וְכֹסֶהוּ מוֹתוֹ צַדִּיק, but the righteous has refuge in his death). Chasah (חָסָה, take refuge, trust) indicates confident hope. Death is the righteous person's doorway to God's presence. This proverb provides ultimate comfort—death is gain for believers (Philippians 1:21) but terror for the wicked.

Historical Context

Old Testament saints had growing understanding of life after death. Job declared: "I know that my redeemer liveth" (Job 19:25). David trusted God wouldn't leave his soul in Sheol (Psalm 16:10). Daniel prophesied resurrection (Daniel 12:2). This proverb affirms differing destinies. Jesus' resurrection illuminated these truths—believers have living hope (1 Peter 1:3), while the wicked face fearful judgment (Hebrews 10:27).
