

Proverbs 17:27

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

He that hath knowledge spareth his words: and a man of understanding is of an excellent spirit.

Analysis

This proverb commends wise speech: 'He that hath knowledge spareth his words: and a man of understanding is of an excellent spirit.' Those with genuine knowledge (da'at) are sparing with words—they don't feel compelled to speak constantly or prove themselves through much speaking. 'A man of understanding' (ish tevunah) possesses an 'excellent spirit' (qar-ruach—literally 'cool of spirit,' meaning calm, composed, level-headed). The principle: wisdom shows itself in measured, restrained speech, not constant talking. This anticipates James' teaching: 'let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak' (James 1:19). Fools multiply words; the wise speak judiciously.

Historical Context

Ancient rhetorical cultures valued eloquence and persuasive speech. Yet Proverbs repeatedly warns against hasty or excessive words (10:19, 13:3, 17:28, 21:23, 29:20), prizing careful, measured speech. This wisdom countered both ancient sophistry and modern cultures of constant communication and opinion-sharing. Silence and restraint often demonstrate wisdom more than voluble speech.
