

Proverbs 19:25

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Smite a scorner, and the simple will beware: and reprove one that hath understanding, and he will understand knowledge.

Analysis

This verse prescribes different pedagogical methods for different character types. The 'scorner' (Hebrew 'lets,' one who mocks wisdom) learns only through public consequences; when he is punished, the 'simple' (naive, uncommitted) take warning. The scorner himself rarely learns from correction, but his judgment educates others. In contrast, the 'understanding' person profits from mere reproof without needing punishment—he receives wisdom gladly. This reflects varying degrees of teachability and wisdom. The truly wise learn from words; the simple learn from observation; the scoffer learns only through suffering (if at all). This validates both verbal instruction and discipline in wisdom's pedagogy.

Historical Context

Public punishment in Israelite society served both justice and education, teaching the community God's standards. The gates where judgment occurred became classrooms in righteousness.
