

Proverbs 20:4

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

The sluggard will not plow by reason of the cold; therefore shall he beg in harvest, and have nothing.

Analysis

The 'sluggard' (Hebrew 'atsel'—lazy person) won't plow in winter due to cold, so he begs during harvest and receives nothing. This illustrates the principle of sowing and reaping. Those who avoid necessary labor when it's difficult will lack when it's time to enjoy fruit. Reformed theology emphasizes diligent work as Christian calling (2 Thessalonians 3:10). Slothfulness is sin—a failure of stewardship and trust in God's providence. This proverb warns that present ease purchased through laziness yields future want.

Historical Context

Palestinian winters (October-March) were the plowing and sowing season, though cold and rainy. Farmers who avoided this difficult work would have no crops to harvest in spring and summer, leading to begging and hunger.
