

Proverbs 22:11

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

He that loveth pureness of heart, for the grace of his lips the king shall be his friend.

Analysis

When the scorner is punished, the simple person learns wisdom through observation. When the wise person receives instruction, he gains knowledge directly. This restates principles found elsewhere in Proverbs: different people require different pedagogical approaches. The simple (naive) need concrete examples; the wise profit from teaching alone. The scorner himself rarely learns but his punishment educates others. This validates both public justice (which teaches observers) and personal instruction (which suffices for the teachable). God's judgments serve pedagogical purposes—teaching both the judged and those who witness judgment. Believers should learn from both correction and observation rather than requiring personal disaster.

Historical Context

Public punishments served both justice and education in Israelite society. Witnessing consequences taught the fear of God and deterred sin.
