

Proverbs 25:19

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Confidence in an unfaithful man in time of trouble is like a broken tooth, and a foot out of joint.

Analysis

Confidence in an unfaithful person in trouble is like a broken tooth or lame foot. The Hebrew 'batach' (trust/confidence) in 'boghed' (treacherous/unfaithful) creates vivid imagery. Broken tooth and lame foot: both fail when needed most. Tooth breaks when chewing; foot fails when walking. Similarly, unfaithful people fail when you most need them. This warns: evaluate others' faithfulness before crisis, not during. Unreliable people can't be relied on when reliability matters most.

Historical Context

Ancient life involved genuine dependence on others' faithfulness - traveling companions, business partners, treaty allies. Unfaithfulness in crisis could prove fatal. David's mighty men demonstrated faithfulness in his adversity (2 Samuel 23). Conversely, Ahithophel's betrayal devastated David (2 Samuel 15-17). Modern individualism may obscure interdependence, but wisdom still requires discerning who's faithful before trusting them in crises.
