

Proverbs 26:5

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Answer a fool according to his folly, lest he be wise in his own conceit.

Analysis

This verse seems to contradict verse 4: 'Answer a fool according to his folly, lest he be wise in his own conceit.' But both are true in different contexts. Sometimes answering exposes folly and prevents self-deception. The Hebrew 'pen yihyeh chakam be'eynay' (lest he be wise in his own eyes) emphasizes the danger of fools thinking themselves wise when unchallenged. Wisdom requires discerning when silence enables pride and when rebuke is necessary. Reformed theology values balanced application of truth to specific situations, not rigid legalism.

Historical Context

Jewish wisdom tradition embraced paradox and situation-dependent wisdom. Life's complexity requires multiple, sometimes seemingly contradictory, principles applied with discernment.

Study Questions

1. How do you discern when to answer a fool (verse 5) versus when to remain silent (verse 4)?
2. What situations require exposing folly lest it grow unchecked?
3. How does this pair of proverbs teach the need for wisdom in application, not just knowledge of rules?
