

Proverbs 3:10

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

So shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine.

Analysis

---

This verse promises agricultural abundance to those who honor God with their wealth (v. 9). The Hebrew 'male' (filled) suggests overflowing abundance, not merely sufficiency. God's economic principle is generosity producing multiplication - not scarcity mentality but faith that giving to God increases rather than depletes. This anticipates Malachi 3:10's promise and Luke 6:38's principle that generous measure returns to generous givers.

Historical Context

Ancient Israel's agrarian economy made grain and wine harvest success matters of survival. Tithing and firstfruits offering demonstrated trust that God, not human effort alone, provides. This required faith - would giving away first and best leave enough? God promises that honoring Him never results in lack.

Study Questions

1. How does your giving reflect trust in God's provision versus fear of scarcity?
2. What would it look like to honor God with the 'firstfruits' of your income before allocating to other expenses?
3. How might generous giving actually increase your overall prosperity in ways beyond merely financial?
