

Proverbs 31:26

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness.

Analysis

---

She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness—The פ (pe, meaning 'mouth') line fittingly addresses speech. Chokhmah (wisdom) encompasses skill, discernment, and moral insight—the central theme of Proverbs itself. Her words aren't idle chatter but edifying counsel. The parallel torat-chesed (law/teaching of kindness) suggests both gracious manner and substantive instruction.

Chesed (covenant loyalty, steadfast love) governs her speech—she speaks truth with grace, correction with compassion. This recalls Proverbs' earlier personification of Wisdom as a woman calling out instruction (1:20-33, 8:1-36). The eshet chayil embodies that wisdom in flesh and blood. She is competent not only in hands (vv.13,19-20) but also in words, teaching her household and community the ways of God.

Historical Context

In ancient Israelite culture, mothers were primary educators of children (Proverbs 1:8, 6:20), teaching both practical skills and moral instruction. Older women also mentored younger women (Titus 2:3-5). The 'law of kindness' on her tongue reflects Torah's vision of gracious, life-giving speech that builds up rather than tears down.

Study Questions

1. How do your words demonstrate both wisdom (truth/discernment) and chesed (gracious loyalty)?
2. What would it mean for the 'law of kindness' to govern your speech—not sentimentality but covenant faithfulness?
3. In what areas might you need to develop competence in words as much as competence in hands?
