

Proverbs 6:8

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest.

Analysis

The ant provides food in summer and gathers in harvest - wisdom is seasonal appropriateness. The Hebrew 'kuwn' (prepare/establish) and 'agar' (gather) describe foresighted labor. What's gathered in abundance sustains through scarcity. This verse teaches that wisdom recognizes opportune timing - there are seasons for sowing, growing, harvesting, storing. Miss the season, miss the blessing. Laziness ignores God's temporal ordering of provision.

Historical Context

Agricultural calendars governed ancient life - fixed seasons for planting, tending, harvesting, storing. Ecclesiastes 3:1-8 celebrates this temporal wisdom: 'To every thing there is a season.' Missing harvest meant famine. This agricultural reality became spiritual metaphor - recognize and respond to providential opportunities.
