

Proverbs 7:12

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Now is she without, now in the streets, and lieth in wait at every corner.)

Analysis

Now in the streets, now in the squares, lurking at every corner. The Hebrew 'arab' (lie in wait/ambush) describes predatory positioning. The seductress strategically places herself where targets gather. This isn't passive availability but active hunting. Temptation often involves environmental engineering - placing ourselves where we know we're vulnerable. Wisdom requires avoiding dangerous places, not testing our resistance in them.

Historical Context

Ancient marketplaces and public squares were social centers. Prostitutes positioned themselves strategically for maximum visibility. The principle applies broadly: predatory people and influences deliberately inhabit spaces where vulnerable targets congregate. Modern equivalents include bars, certain online spaces, and social contexts that facilitate particular sins.

Study Questions

1. What 'corners' do you habitually turn where temptation lurks predictably?
2. How can you alter your patterns to avoid places where you're most vulnerable?
3. What environmental engineering would reduce your exposure to strategic temptation?
