

Proverbs 7:8

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Passing through the street near her corner; and he went the way to her house,

Analysis

The path to sin is described as passing 'near her corner' and taking 'the way to her house.' Sin rarely happens instantly; it begins with proximity and small compromises. The Reformed understanding of progressive sanctification recognizes that we must avoid the path to sin, not just the act itself. Joseph fled from Potiphar's wife (Genesis 39:12), exemplifying this wisdom. This verse teaches that victory over temptation often means avoiding situations where we're vulnerable, not trusting our strength when already near danger.

Historical Context

Ancient cities' narrow streets and courtyards made privacy difficult. 'Her corner' likely refers to known locations where prostitutes solicited customers, making avoidance a conscious choice requiring altered routes.
